"Accelerating" the "Colossus."
Lemuel Ely Quigg, the widely known "accelerator," and attorney for Thomas F. Ryan, the influential New York democrat, has "come out" for Theodore Roosevelt. He tells the republicans that if they are wise they will nominate Mr. Roosevelt for President. Never mind about 1912. For get all about Mr. Roosevelt's socialistic ideas. Remember only the sturdy fighter who led the party for some years, and is just as much of a republican today as ever he was. Take him as a sure shot. With him success will be certain. With any other candidate—even Justice Hughes—who could safely say?

This is the latest confirmation of the belief, now widespread, that the Roosevelt candidacy is in the hands of Big Business and Big Democrats. The ball moovers are few and influential. They are still devoted, and will do their little bit with happiness, but are no longer in charge.
The Gary dinner showed that Mr. Roosevelt had in some way made his peace with Wall street. Men who had shuddered at the mere mention of his name a few years ago now sat at table with him and exchanged views with him about the country and its present needs. The company went into the committee of the whole on the state of the Union, practically with Mr. Roosevelt in the chair. Judge Gary, the accomplished host, objected after the repast had been disposed of in favor of the guest of honor—and of most importance.

That function inaugurated what has since become a sort of industry. Big Business has been busier than ever. It is booming Mr. Roosevelt for all it can get. In Pennsylvania, Illinois, Indiana and throughout New England it is as tireless as in New York and New Jersey, in its efforts to represent Mr. Roosevelt as the sole hope of those who desire the defeat of Mr. Wilson.

Such a combination could not conceal itself. It is too big to operate in a corner. So that, as a matter of necessity if nothing else, it is operating openly and aggressively. It knows what it wants, and proclaims it. Can it possibly win? Is there any republican of influence today who does not recall the burden Judge Parker had to carry in 1904 in the support of a majority of the Wall street magnates of that day? A substantial portion of Mr. Roosevelt's strength in the country at large then was based on the fact that Wall street did not like him. Now that, for a reason sufficient for itself, it has forgiven and taken him to its bosom, could it "put him over" in November? What is nearer the impossible?

If reports that the Kaiser expects the battle of Verdun to end the war are true, it is not clear why his government should hold out for U-boat warfare.
Recollections of the peace ship are calculated to make the average naval expert tremble at the idea of Henry Ford as even a remote possibility for presidential nomination.

Berlin expresses the belief that a break will be avoided. Previous experience with the forbearance of American statesmanship would naturally invite further hopes.

The origin of the American flag continues to provide an interesting topic of discussion, but the protection of its dignity is recognized as the really important consideration.

The Ford Boom.
The Ford presidential boom marks to an extreme degree what may be called the disorganization of the times. Things are at sixes and sevens. Many men are drifting on a turbulent tide; and, apparently, some neither know nor care where they land. Any port in a storm.

Henry Ford, in a way, is an interesting man. With a decided turn for money-making, he has amassed a large fortune, and yet has not been hindered by his success. That his sympathies with the struggling and the distressed are broad and deep and sincere is beyond question. That he desires to see, and to help make, the world better no thoughtful person can doubt.

Though visionary as to some matters, Mr. Ford sees clearly as to this movement to land him in the White House. He does not take it seriously. He is not encouraging it. He seems not to be inquiring over much as to its real meaning, or to be concerned as to where it will "pull up."

What is the meaning of the boom? How many of those who are active in the movement really believe that at a time of worldwide commotion, the effects of which are likely to be felt for years, the interests of America would be best served by coming under the general direction of a man without political experience of any kind or degree? What would be the result of his selection on home affairs and on foreign affairs? Both would be affected, and necessarily to a considerable extent.

In this matter our chief concern should be as to how others see us. As matters stand we are viewed with amazement by all outsiders who have time and curiosity to look this way. Our army and navy establishments are so far short of requirements some foreigners have come to wonder. What can we be thinking about, if about anything, in a world of cupidity, competition, controversy and collisions? Upon what may be our reliance for safety when we have so much which would be at the mercy of force if force should be directed against it? Who could calculate the loss if loss should fall upon us?

Now it is proposed to cap all this with the selection for President of a man without experience in, or ambition or qualifications for, government affairs; and one of the leading parties in a great state declares for him.

The Ford boom is the logical expression of millennialism. If the world is turning to love, and America is to lead the procession, Mr. Ford, more fittingly even than Mr. Bryan, is the man for leader.

Another Track-Side Signal Failure.

A few weeks ago a rear-end collision on the New York, New Haven and Hartford railroad at Milford, Conn., caused the death of ten persons. After an inquiry into the wreck, which developed a confusion of testimony regarding the signals, the engineer of the colliding train, an express following a stalled local, was blamed. The engineer having died in the wreck, no action followed.

Yesterday at Bradford, R. L. on the same line a stalled local was hit by an express coming from behind, and five persons were killed. The testimony thus far adduced shows that a danger signal was set against the express, but was not observed by the engineer, who declares that a heavy fog obscured the lights and he was unable to stop his train in time. It has been urged on behalf of the railroad which has thus suffered from two rear-end collisions within a short time, sacrificing fifteen lives, that it is equipped with an up-to-date signal system. When The Star, commenting on the Milford wreck, pointed out the inadequacy of the track-side signals in use, a representative of the company in a letter declared that an injustice had been done to the railroad, which had adopted the very best possible device to safeguard the lives of its passengers.

Here is the same road again demonstrating in its misfortune the inadequacy of the signal system upon which it relies for the protection of its passengers. If that is the best system possible, then indeed is the traveling public subjected to grave perils. If engineers cannot be trusted to observe danger lights in clear weather or to run their trains cautiously in fog the track-side signals are worthless.

Until the signal is brought into the cab, and there operated so as to make positively a record not only for the engineer to observe, but for inspectors later to examine to test the carefulness of the man running the train, there will be no safety on railroads operating on close headway. Continued reliance upon the track-side system, without checks upon the engineers, means to invite disaster. And the public will pay, in lives, for this persistence in a policy of railroad operation which the interstate commerce commission, in a recent report on the Milford wreck on the New Haven line, condemns. How long will it be before a law is passed by Congress requiring every railroad doing interstate business to adopt some system of cab signals that will first warn and then, if the warning is ignored, stop the train automatically?

Diplomacy sometimes piles up such a voluminous record that there is a chance that some of the facts will be lost sight of.

The D. A. R. insists on reminders of those old revolutionary days when mothers frankly raised their boys to be soldiers.

The Standard Oil Company is reminded that dissolution does not bar investigation.

There is no known method of convincing the submarine commander that he ought to do some of the worrying.

The battle of Verdun has endured long enough to be considered a war on its own account.

The feelings of a pacifist who took a tip to buy war stocks are likely to be a trifle complicated.

The Annual Clean-Up.

During this week the District is scouring up the premises. Householders are raking their yards and cleaning their cellars and otherwise putting their property in order. Tons of refuse will be gathered and hauled away for disposal. Most of this stuff will have been accumulating for months, neglected trash ignored during the winter when little attention is paid to appearances. If every week in the year were clean-up week, as it should be, the District would not have this annual big job to do. But it is better to clean at least once a year than not at all. Every time the city is scraped and scoured under the impulse of a general clean-up campaign some householders are converted to the habit of continuous, persistent care in the keeping of their premises.

Washington is easily cleaned. It has comparatively few very dirty places as have many other cities. Its greatest disadvantage in this respect is that in some quarters there is a general aspect of untidiness, due in part to the renting system and to the lack of individual ownership of dwellings. In some parts, too, the care of the parkings is slack and spaces that should be well turfed and attractive are worn bare and ugly by careless feet.

Clean-up week should mean more than merely gathering refuse and making the premises tidy and sanitary. It should include some positive efforts to make the city attractive. Of two houses that are kept equally clean and spruce the one that shows a bit of gardening in front, a bed of flowers, or a group of shrubs, or a few vines, or a set of window or porch boxes will attract more approving attention. Work of this kind is inexpensive. A few dollars spent annually by each household in this effort will make Washington bloom as a garden city.

A Clue to Dorothy Arnold's Fate.

If the clue to the fate of Dorothy Arnold, who disappeared from her home in New York more than five years ago, which is given in the alleged confession of a prisoner at Cranston, R. I., is trustworthy, one of the most profound mysteries in American police annals is in a way to be solved. Miss Arnold's disappearance caused a worldwide search. She left practically no trace whatever of herself or her plans. Many theories were advanced, and many alleged clues were found leading in various directions. A great amount of money was spent by Mr. Arnold in the search for his daughter, and he was aided by volunteers who covered a wide field. The Rhode Island prisoner declares that he was hired by a man to assist in taking Miss Arnold to a house at West Point, N. Y., where she was ill for several days, and then, upon her death, he helped to bury her in the cellar of the building. It should be easy to prove or disprove this part of his assertion if he can identify the house, and if evidences are found there to confirm his story the principals in the case should be reached.

"Who Is This?"

If a person rings the front doorbell he is not supposed to ask, "Who are you?" of the one who answers the summons. Yet that is practically what is done when a telephone caller greets the responding "Hello" with "Who is this?" There are many little annoyances in telephone usage, but this is perhaps one of the most provoking. To be called to the phone and then asked to establish identity is calculated to unbalance the equanimity, especially of a busy person. Telephone practice is after all largely a matter of manners, notwithstanding the separation in distance of the persons who are talking. Probably the one who asks "Who is this?" on calling another is mentally off guard momentarily on hearing a voice other than that which is expected, but even so the effect on the person who is called is unfortunate. Telephone users should always bear in mind the fact that it is best to establish their own identity first of all when the connection is made, so as to leave no question as to who is speaking from the initiating end.

The ease with which a city might be bombarded without warning is startling. There is solace in the reflection that few bombardments are absolutely without warning.

As a war machine the aeroplane did not make a convincing record in Mexico.

Villa is suspected of being so lost to propriety that he would use his own funeral as a stratagem.

It remains to be seen whether any Mexican will seek to take up the brig and business where Villa left it off.

SHOOTING STARS.

BY PHILANDER JOHNSON.

Difficult Riddance.

"We'll have to get rid of graft," said the indignant citizen.
"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum; "and we'll have to devise some system by which getting rid of one kind of graft doesn't create tempting possibilities of another."

Suspicious Character.

A bandit has no sense of shame.
Suspicious we avow
That since he tries 'most every game,
He's playing 'possum now.

Other Extreme.

"You must admit that our oratorical friend doesn't use long words."
"No. He goes to the other extreme and even works the little pronoun 'I'."

Arranging a Celebration.

"Charley dear," said young Mrs. Torkins, "are we going to celebrate Shakespeare's birthday?"
"If you wish."

"I think we ought to. We'll buy a statuette of Shakespeare and put a wreath around its head and then spend the evening at the movies."

Discerning Youth.

"Do you believe rabbits lay Easter eggs?" asked one small boy.
"No," replied the other. "I don't know whether that story is to be considered a myth or a nature fake."

April Exhibition.

Biggest show I ever saw,
Had no whoop and no hurrah;
But the scenery, I'll state,
Was astonishingly great.
The early morning sky
Tints that faded by and by,
Made a spectacle so rare
That I had to stop and stare.
Then the music sweetly strange
Unhired in a magic change
And the creatures of the wood,
Doing each the best it could;
Showed untriflingly at length
Feats of courage, skill and strength.
And the decoration fair
Plunged soft fragrance through the air,
Till at last the lights turned low
For the finish of the show,
And the curtain slowly fell
Shutting out the mystic spell
That gave me my money's worth
At this greatest show on earth.
